Global America Business Institute Activities

Period 11/1/2019—4/30/2020

11/8/2019 "Dialogue on DPRK Denuclearization Roadmaps and Verification"

Abstract: In November 2018, Kyung Hee University located in Seoul, the Global America Business Institute (GABI) based in Washington, D.C., and the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) headquartered in New York convened a private meeting to discuss findings from technical and policy experts related to a possible DPRK denuclearization roadmap. One-year later, the three entities hosted a follow-up workshop—summarizing the findings of previous year's meeting, discussing relevant developments in the past year, and reviewing progress on research and technical work that will be pertinent to DPRK denuclearization. The meeting was off the record, and recommendations and lessons learned from the dialogue was briefed to stakeholders and policymakers on this subject.

11/13/2019 "U.S.-ROK Cooperation on Nuclear Energy to Address Climate Change"

Speakers: Matt Bowen, Columbia University; Steve Brick, Independent Consultant

Abstract: Both the United States and the Republic of Korea (ROK) derive most of their energy consumption from fossil fuels, primarily oil, coal, and natural gas. While the U.S. has achieved decreased carbon emissions in recent years by displacing coal generation with natural gas use, deep decarbonization would not be possible through switching coal for natural gas alone. GHG emissions in the ROK have steadily risen due to increases in both electricity demand and fossil fuel consumption. Nuclear power represents more than half of each country's low-carbon electricity supply, and maintenance and/or expansion of nuclear capacity will likely be required for either country to realistically achieve deep decarbonization. Pragmatic policies in both the U.S. and Korea would not only provide a decarbonization blueprint for other countries, but building upon longstanding bilateral civil nuclear ties could allow other countries to more feasibly replicate this blueprint. Enhanced cooperation in areas such as supply chain integration, advanced reactors, and materials R&D could strengthen the viability of nuclear energy as a contributor to climate mitigation efforts and foster pathways for other countries to practically implement decarbonization strategies using nuclear power.

12/11/2019 "Emerging Issues in the US-Korea Energy Partnership"

Speakers: Minister Young Jin Jang, Minister for Economic Affairs, Korean Embassy; The Honorable Edward Whitfield, Principal, Farragut Partners; Former Congressman (R, KY); Jack Spencer, Vice President, Institute for Economic Freedom and Opportunity, Heritage Foundation; Dr. Sunita Satyapal, Director, Fuel Cell Technologies Office, US Department of Energy (DOE); Chair, IPHE; Andrew Paterson, Principal, Environmental Business International (EBI); Dr. Kun Mo Chung, Distinguished Professor at the Graduate School of Science Policy, Korea; Advanced Institute of Science and Technology (KAIST); Former Minister of Science and Technology, Republic of Korea

Abstract: The US and South Korea have maintained a strong political alliance since South Korea's liberation in the mid 1900s. This strong alliance has resulted in a number of successful cooperative efforts in energy R&D solutions. Furthermore, because South Korea and the US both share similar obstacles in their energy industries, there may be a significant opportunity for both countries to collaborate to overcome issues in the current global energy industry. For example, both the US and Korea are strong players in the hydrogen technology industry as well as the nuclear technology industry. By combining efforts, finances, and other resources to address these similar issues, the US-Korea alliance can utilize their combined strengths to overcome energy supply concerns to deliver cheap, readily available, and clean energy to meet their domestic energy demand.

1/29/2020     *'Imperatives and Pathways for Advanced Nuclear Test Capabilities: The Case of the Versatile Test Reactor'

Speakers: Irfan Ali, Advanced Reactor Concepts (ARC); Dr. Soon-heung Chang, Handong Global University (HGU); Cyril Draffin, U.S. Nuclear Industry Council; Dr. Kemal Pasamehmetoglu, Idaho National Laboratory; Hon. Edward Whitfield, Farragut Partners

Abstract: As the global community moves towards cleaner energy generation sources, nuclear energy will play a larger role. Specifically, advanced nuclear offers a number of key characteristics that may solidify its significance as a large portion of the future energy mix, as it allows for more efficient fuel usage, improved passive safety, and improved economics among a number of benefits. However, in order for the US to realize the widespread deployment and commercialization of advanced reactors, further testing is required. The Versatile Test Reactor (VTR) offers itself as a strong opportunity to develop the domestic capabilities to test fuels, materials, sensors, and components in a fast reactor environment. By enabling this testing capability, the US is securing its capability to retake the global nuclear technology leadership. Currently, the only option for advanced reactor companies to perform fast reactor experiments is to utilize Russian state owned facilities. Furthermore, losing the technology leadership in the nuclear industry prevents the US from enforcing its own nonproliferation standards to emerging civil nuclear markets. Thus, the VTR project represents both a pathway to gain technology leadership in advanced nuclear technologies and a geopolitical tool that can be utilized to form long standing national alliances. The VTR is supported not only through bipartisan Congressional support, but also through international cooperation and partnerships with the domestic US advanced nuclear industry. Currently, the VTR project involves two international partners, France and Japan, but there may be opportunities in the future for additional foreign entities to collaborate on the VTR project.

4/14/2020     *"International Co-financing of Nuclear Reactors between the U.S. and its Allies" (Virtual Event)

Speaker: Jennifer Gordon, Atlantic Council

Abstract: The high capital costs and financial risks associated with new-build nuclear plant projects necessitate innovative solutions, financing sources, and business models. One possible means of addressing some of these issues is the establishment of partnerships between the U.S. and its close allies to co-finance new nuclear construction. International cooperation in putting together comprehensive and attractive export financing packages will significantly enhance export competitiveness. Failure by the U.S. and its allies to improve their competitive positions will increase the likelihood of Russia and China assuming global leadership in the civil nuclear arena, ultimately affecting the United States' capacity to uphold international safety, security, and nonproliferation norms.
